To whom it may concern,

Please note that participations held by a German Stiftung ("Stiftung") do not constitute the private property of one or more shareholders. A Stiftung is a legal entity comparable to a foundation and as such subject to individual rights and obligations. However, a Stiftung is not to be mistaken for a trust. Furthermore, the Stiftung has no trustees but instead so-called beneficiaries which in turn are not to be mistaken for beneficial owners. In fact, the concept of beneficial ownership does not apply to a Stiftung under German law.

In contrast to a trust where the trustees are the legal owners of the trust's assets, the assets of a Stiftung are legally owned by the German Stiftung itself. In fact, the founder of a Stiftung irrevocably transfers certain assets to the Stiftung (not to a trustee) and hereby provides the Stiftung with an economic basis. On that ground the Stiftung pursues a certain purpose which is determined by the founder and manifested in the Stiftung's statutes. Such purpose can also include the financial assistance to the Stiftung's beneficiaries. Please note, that after the assets have been transferred to the Stiftung, the founder has no longer rights or obligations in these assets.

The Stiftung operates independently. It is run by its executive bodies (comparable to the management of a company). However, neither a controlling shareholder exists nor has the founder of the Stiftung any legal influence. The same applies for the Stiftung's beneficiaries. The sole directive for the Stiftung's executive bodies are the Stiftung's statutes. Federal Authorities supervise the operations of the Stiftung.

Consequently, a Stiftung does not act in the interest of or as trustee for third parties, but rather in its own name and for its own account in order to fulfill its purpose.

Best regards

Specifications of a German Stiftung

To whom it may concern,

Please note that participations held by a German Stiftung ("Stiftung") do not constitute the private property of one or more shareholders. A Stiftung is a legal entity comparable to a foundation and as such subject to individual rights and obligations. However, a Stiftung is not to be mistaken for a trust. Furthermore, the Stiftung has no trustees but instead so-called beneficiaries which in turn are not to be mistaken for beneficial owners. In fact, the concept of beneficial ownership does not apply to a Stiftung under German law.

In contrast to a trust where the trustees are the legal owners of the trust's assets, the assets of a Stiftung are legally owned by the German Stiftung itself. In fact, the founder of a Stiftung transfers certain assets to the Stiftung (not to a trustee) and hereby provides the Stiftung with an economic basis. On that ground the Stiftung pursues a certain purpose which is determined by the founder and manifested in the Stiftung's statutes. Such purpose can also include the financial assistance to the Stiftung's beneficiaries. Please note, that after the assets have been transferred to the Stiftung, the founder has no longer rights or obligations in these assets.

The Stiftung operates independently. It is run by its executive bodies (comparable to the management of a company). However, neither a controlling shareholder exists nor has the founder of the Stiftung any legal influence. The same applies for the Stiftung's beneficiaries. The sole directive for the Stiftung's executive bodies are the Stiftung's statutes. Federal Authorities supervise the operations of the Stiftung.

Consequently, a Stiftung does not act in the interest of or as trustee for third parties, but rather in its own name and for its own account in order to fulfill its purpose.

Best regards
