How do you define the measure of a man? For Melvin Wilson, it meant being a compassionate man of integrity, oozing class and sophistication, caring deeply about the community, and being committed to civic engagement. Most of all - it meant putting family first.

WHEREAS, Melvin Wilson was born in Chicago, Illinois, on September 22, 1934, to the union of Mattie (Pearson) and Thomas Wilson Sr. He was the fourth of eight children. Melvin and his siblings were all raised to work together because their father and six brothers laid the hard work ethic and entrepreneurial foundation for their family.

After high school, Melvin chose the trade of sheet metal as his career path.

WHEREAS, On April 30, 1955, he married the love of his life, Bernice Keaton, and they shared 44 beautiful years of marriage. Their union blessed them with LaDonna and Stacey Lynn, both adoring Daddy's Girls. As a young man, he took on the responsibility of providing for his family. He landed an apprenticeship in 1953 at Blue M. Electric Company and enrolled in the five-point Heating & Air Condition Training Program at Westinghouse. His responsibilities grew each year until he became a shop foreman and supervisor in charge of refrigeration and assembly.

WHEREAS, In January 1969, Melvin taught vocational education at Simeon Vocational High School. He desired to teach young men the skills that had propelled him professionally and financially. In addition to teaching, Melvin decided to attend Chicago State University, where he earned a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Professional Education. Never one to be stagnant, Melvin was on to something new by 1984, where he served as treasurer at the Chicago Teachers Union, His mission was to fight for the fair rights of the Chicago Public School Teachers and the Paraprofessionals to ensure they had all the resources needed to perform their duties to the best of their ability and unencumbered by the policies of the Chicago Board of Education.
